Much to the dismay of the prospective employee, it can be cumbersome to find an employee job in which the prospective employee is not required to concede to signing a non-compete agreement before commencing the employee job. Employers often require prospective employees to acquiesce to signing a non-compete agreement as a mandatory requirement before they are able to attain the employee job. Much to the consternation of the prospective employee, non-compete agreements are broad in scope and are eminently unfavorable to prospective employees. A non-compete agreement is a legal agreement or clause in a contract wherein an employee agrees not to enter into a competition with an employer during the employment period and after the employment period is over. These non-compete agreement also prohibit the employee from revealing proprietary information or trade secrets to any other parties during the employment period and after the employment period is over. Non-compete agreements are signed when the relationship between employer and employee begins. They give the employer control over specific actions of the former employee even after that relationship ends. These non-competitor agreements have specific clauses stating that the employee will not only not enter into a competition with an employer during the employment period, but will also not work for a competitor after their employment is over, regardless of whether they are terminated or resign. Employees are also prevented from working for a competitor even if the new job would not involve disclosing trade secrets. Some of the terms of the non-compete agreement may include the length of time the employee is bound to the non-compete agreement, the geographic location, and/or market. These non-compete agreement may also be called a 'covenant not to compete' or a 'restrictive covenant.' Non-competes ensure the employee will not use information learned during employment to start a business and compete with the employer once work is over. It also ensures the employer keeps its place in the market. Non-competes agreements are tailored to be highly favorable to employers and highly unfavorable to employees. Signing a non-compete agreements can adversely impact an individual's livelihood since it can preempt the individual from being able to earn revenue by severely restricting their ability to work. Non-compete agreements are so broad in scope that they can for instance prevent a former employee from being able to work in multiple industries and being able to work in multiple self-employed capacities for even additional years after the employee has resigned from the company of which he entered into a non-compete agreement with. Non-competes agreements are even required by most employers for prospective employees to sign in order to attain dead end, minimum wage, dispiriting, distressful, brutally wretched jobs. Non-competes agreements are leveraged by employers throughout a myriad of disparate industries.
